

FAYETTE LAWYERS PROTEST AGAINST CONDITIONS OF SURVEYS.

File Petition With the Court Asking that County Surveyor's Records be Put in Shape Again.

VALUABLE PAPERS SCATTERED.

Court Orders That Records Be Preserved at Expense of County—Voting Places Are Changed on Petition. Ramage Wants License.

UNIONTOWN, Oct. 22.—A petition in behalf of the members of the Fayette county bar was filed this morning setting forth that the records of the County Surveyor are in a most deplorable condition and need immediate attention. Since the death of former County Surveyor A. J. Gilmore the office has been no one in the office which is located on the third floor of the court house and the records are scattered all about the place. Not only that but valuable copies of land grants made by the Commonwealth are in some instances missing. With the floor is littered with papers from books containing property lists and other valuable data. As the office of County Surveyor carries with it no salary the person holding this office is not expected to make his headquarters in the court house.

Upon hearing the petition the court ordered that all records in the office be properly bound and put in good condition. When this is done it will be of great assistance to attorneys who find it necessary to make abstracts of titles and work of this nature.

The application of John A. Ramage of Fairbanks for a license for his new hotel at that place was presented at court this morning by Col. A. D. Boyd. The hotel was opened to the public on October 10 and since that time fully 100 transients have been accommodated. Ramage applied for a license at the first term of license court but no action was taken owing to the fact that the house had not been completed.

A few weeks ago a remonstrance against granting the license was filed by the remonstrants being represented by Attorney George B. Jeffries. The fact that Mr. Jeffries is out of town prevented the court from taking action on the application. Col. Boyd argued that the remonstrance is filed six months after the return time should have no weight but the court remarked that the application of Ramage was also a little behind time. However, Boyd argued that the remonstrants knew Ramage was sending in the neighborhood of $6,000 to fix the hotel up and they should have remonstrated before he spent all this money.

Attorney J. O. Christy argued the appeal of W. C. Kettle from a fine imposed by Judge Monrith of Fair Chance. Kettle was fined for disorderly conduct. Christy argued that Monrith had no jurisdiction in alleged disorderly conduct having occurred at High House some miles away. Kettle denies the allegations against him.

A petition was presented for new bridge across Dunlap's creek between Redstone and Lantz townships. The petition is signed by the supervisors of both townships as well as superintendents of various coke works in the neighborhood.

Owing to the absence of District Attorney Hudson who is attending the Supreme Court at Philadelphia it was impossible to argue the criminal cases this morning as was expected.

The will of the late Amy Baldwin of Browns lie was admitted to probate this morning. The property is divided among Clark Baldwin, Anna Baldwin, Caroline Ritchey and Miss Charles Baldwin. The will was dated November 1, 1905 and there are three codicils dated February 25, 1906 making minor changes in the bequests.

WHAT IS MONOPOLY?

The officers of the Standard Oil Company ask, "What is Monopoly?" They answer that there is no definition for it. The Standard Oil Company defines it as follows:

The exclusive right, power or privilege of engaging in a particular trade or business, or the resulting absolute possession or control, especially in political economy, such control of a special thing, as a commodity, as such as the person or persons exercising it to raise the price of it above its real value or above the price it would bring under competition.

A company or combination in possession of a monopoly.

The Standard Oil Company's monopoly of the oil business of the country has been open and notorious for many years. This corporation has had such control of the oil production of the country as has enabled it to raise the price above its real value or above the price it would bring under competition, and the resulting monopoly in possession of a monopoly.

It may be argued that the Standard Oil Company's monopoly is a monopoly of the oil business of the country, but it is not a monopoly of the oil business of the country, but it is a monopoly of the oil business of the country.

The accumulated millions upon millions of the Standard are ample and complete proof of the fact that it has been a monopoly, and one that has completely oppressed the people.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN.
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

Copyright, 1907, by McClure, Phillips & Company.

"I won't ask you another question—if I can help it. Believe me, I haven't meant to press your confidence in mere curiosity, but in my wish to help you, though I don't pretend that you have not made me extremely curious about yourself too. But now—about finding employment for you in town. Would you really make the break with these people here and go to the city if you could get a position there?"

"I suppose there is a joke somewhere in me than my life here. And so," she concluded, her eyes dropping and her voice sinking to a lower key, "I have decided that I will go away."

"Isn't it rather singular," he said,
"that you should mention it and even go to your going away—he of all persons?"

"But he does not. He knows nothing of my decision," she said, "and I don't tell him. I'm sure of it. I don't want to tell him," she breathed anxiously.

"Well, hardly. But you say it is he who tells you you are free to leave."

"He says I am free, but to go to town—he never dreams of my doing that—free to marry him."

"Which you will eventually do?"

"There! Pardon me—I promised to ask you no more questions. Now, as to these Mennonite matters, of course there will be a row when they find you going. Can you stand up against it?"

"It will be war," she sighed.

"But I shall not flatter."

"You are sure you won't waver when old Mennonite goes at you?"

"I am sure," she said quietly.

"He won't easily let you go, you know. You save money for the old idiot. To spare yourself a struggle with him why don't you get away secretly and let him fight it out with himself after you are gone?"

"I have considered that way of leaving, but I have decided against it. I prefer to leave openly. But more than that, I should like to see him."

"Of should like to see him," he agreed. He wondered if this signified that she did or did not re-invoice Abe's devotion. It might be interpreted either way. Her caring for Abe was not more inconceivable than some other things about her. Suddenly he decided to tell her what it was her unexpected right to know—that Mennonite Mack's visits were for her, not Ollie.
It would be interesting also to see how she would take it. Would it prove a pleasant surprise to her?

"Perhaps your problem may be solved in an easier way than going to town to earn your living. I'll tell you something. Mennonite Mack's visits here have been meant for you, not Ollie.
He wants to keep company with you. Perhaps knowing this you may reconsider your purpose to go to town."

"The information made apparently very little impression on her, except to give her a strange look of wonder and sadness."

"Did Mennonite tell you," she asked in a justified voice, "what he wanted to come to see me?"

"He observed that she did not say
'keep company'." He wondered why he brightness had so suddenly gone out of her at the mention of Mennonite.
"No," he said, "I overheard him telling old Mennonite. I have meant to tell you."

"I've known it," she answered in an uninterested tone. "He writes verses to me."

"Verses! Mennonite Mack?"

"Yes. I find them sticking in the door of the spring house with a bunch of dried violets pinned to them."

"They don't appear to have moved you—the violets and the verses. Are the verses original?"

"You may judge." She drew a sheet of paper from her pocket. "I found these this evening. But you can't read them in this light."

He took a box of matches from his pocket, struck one and read aloud from the sheet of paper she held out to him:

"I give to you this violet
If given that we two have met
And hope that we already yet Once more again together get."

He turned and looked at her. No wonder she looked weary and sad!

"I would not like to trouble you with commissions," she said, "but if I may ask a favor of you—you are always so kind to me."

"If," he said, surprised, "I kind to you?"

Her answer was spoken very low.

"No one else has ever been so kind."

He was silent from astonishment.

She was leaning up little blades of grass at her side with nervous fingers.
He waited for her to go on. But she did not.

"The favor, Eunice?"

For momentary eyes unveiled an interior and looked at him as he spoke her name, and again his pulse stirred as he met the soft fire of her look.

"If you should get an opportunity to speak to Mennonite, will you please tell him to call it?"

"Quit writing poetry?"

"He will expose me to the wrath of Ollie and her father and mother, who have set their hearts on him."

"And you will not defy them and favor him? Or is it Abe that makes them's case so hopeless?"

She gazed at him, her countenance altered to utter despair. "Well, then, that, actually, a real case of the heart and not of mere popularity between her and Abe? Inconceivable!"

Before he could answer, the faint sound of a step on the board walk near the house made him turn to glance over his shoulder.

"Talk of the devil!"

Eunice springing to her feet with the primitive instinct of a startled animal, gave one glance to the door, on the approaching footsteps, on the board walk and without a word darted away around to the back of the building.

After a moment she darted a few feet from the terrace, looked back at her distance, then he started up to Klironos.

He looked at though he had just got out of bed. His hair was tousled. His feet were bare, and he wore neither coat nor waistcoat.

"Say, that there was our Eunice settling up with you. What it was," he demanded aggressively.

"Yes," Klironos curtly nodded, taking a fresh cigar from one pocket and a match from another. "Abe had always been ashamed in his presence, but this evening was evidently giving him unprecedented courage. Klironos, feeling a pang of pity against him for having driven Eunice away, tried to use his fists."

"What was she doing?" demanded Abe in a tone of sudden suspicion.

"Doing? Nothing. Klironos responded blowing a cloud of smoke from his mouth."

"What was she here for, then?"

"Because she chose to be I suppose."

"She went up to bed when I did a while ago. At last she's back down again!"

"I might ask the same question of you, Abe."

"I heard her when she snuck downstairs. So I put some tobacco on and followed her up."

"What for?"

"I wanted to see what she was up to anyhow."

"To?" said Klironos in an absent tone, pushing back his hat and blowing up puffs of smoke.

"She came out here and set alongside of you," pursued Abe. "I see her?"

"So did I."

"What for did she want to do that there?" Abe eagerly demanded.

"It was queer taste, Abe, wasn't it?"

"She's my girl, and you ain't to spoon with her!"

"Go to bed, Abe," Klironos advised nearly.

"I took notice she run off mighty quick when she heard me coming," he said, with dark suspicion.

"Not very flattering to you; that's a fact," Klironos conceded.

"Abe, you don't like her do you? Abe threateningly asked."

Klironos took his cigar from his mouth and measured the buccal youth before him with cold eyes, which made the other's faint embarrassment more acute. Then, turning his back on him, he continued to smoke.

Abe scowled, hesitated and finally, with evident reluctance, gave up the fight and slunk away, going slowly back to the house.

It Sounds Well, But—

Municipal ownership is one of those things which sound well in print. But the trying to raise oneself by the bootstraps, it appears impracticable. It ought to be better and cheaper, but it isn't. If it is such a benefit and such a valuable thing, why are communities breaking away from the system and returning to private companies under local municipal control?—Leadville
